Dearest Mildred:

You and I are close tied to the gardens at Dumbarton Oaks and their future, which we both would like to feel was safe and as assured as anything can be in this crazy world. The papers and plans which Mr. Thacher would like to have at Dumbarton Oaks are spoken of in these letters. The plans are, as you already know, valuable for their continuity and their defeats as well as their little victories. Perhaps Mr. Thacher may not realize what an undertaking it will be to go through, catalogue and put in workable order, the letters, drawings and sketches. So these letters are going to Mr. Thacher and the carbon copy of the letter to Mr. Williams who is one of the firmest advocates Dumbarton Oaks has among those of my art. Will you see what you think.

All goes well here, and we start for home in three weeks.

Your devoted

Trix

Mr. John S. Thacher, Director
Dumbarton Oaks Library and Collection
Georgetown, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Thacher:

Mr. Patterson tells me you are preparing for the arrival of the Dumbarton Oaks plans and correspondence. There will be a formidable collection. If I am correct, the designer of a place is supposed to be the owner of the drawings and letters, but as you are ready to take over the big files I am glad to give them to Dumbarton Oaks when you tell me the files are ready and you are ready for the correspondence. Of course you know, by instant, that it is rare that a continuous history of a place covering more than 20 years is to be found. Therefore, the papers have considerable professional value, entirely aside from the importance of the place or the ability of the designer. You will of course want to make this material as available and useful to students of Landscape Architecture as the library and the rest of the collections are to students of a more distant time. Taken all in all, letters, drawings, sketches, etc. there must be well over 5000 items, perhaps more nearly 10,000, and these will need careful sorting and cataloguing which we are trying to do with the Gertrude Jekyll collection at Reef Point.

The same post will carry a letter to Mr. Bradford Williams telling him of the proposed transfer to Dumbarton Oaks and that undoubtedly you will wish him to notify the schools of Landscape Architecture that the material is at Dumbarton Oaks and will be available to properly accredited students, as well as the working library and some of the rarer old books on horticulture and design.

There is no doubt in my mind that you will be eager to add the Dumbarton Oak drawings, etc., to the establishment and that you will agree they shall be a part of the garden educational section of the place.

Trusting you will have a pleasant and profitable journey, I am,

Ever yours,

This letter was written by Mrs. Farrand by hand in California and sent here to be typed.
