Dearest Two:

Here is your Gardner friend back again from California, stopping over the next Sunday at the Princeton Inn. If I get done here on Tuesday afternoon late would it suite your housekeeping better if I spent Tuesday night in Philadelphia in order to allow the household time to change feet, so to speak, after the wedding guests have departed. If so I will arrive a little after lunch time on Wednesday, or I could quietly crawl in after dinner on Tuesday and go straight to bed silently and unobtrusively. Which is going to work best, as both methods are convenient to me?

Max is allowing me to come East with him after Christmas as he is giving a speech at the Philosophical and Historical Society on some Human Aspects of the Constitution, on the Wednesday after Christmas; so I may again have a glimpse of you before we start West.

How I hope the Wedding day today will be as lovely in Washington as yesterday was here in Princeton.

Yours ever and always,
