Dear Miss Sweeney:

Here are copies of the bills for the books which are going to you from the three different places. Will you check them with the books and then return the copies to me as they are needed in my files. As you will notice neither one of the houses were able to send the full list ordered, so that means that I try elsewhere. If you have any other offerings by book concerns would you let me see them in order to try and locate the books we now need. It seems to be an endless job. I do hope your teeth - or rather where they used to be - is now better and that you will soon get some "store" ones that will do the job. If the prices don't go down on eats perhaps we will all need to have our teeth out and just eat soup! It's enough to scare a housewife to death to go into a grocery store or market. But perhaps better days are ahead - let's hope so. Best wishes.

Yours ever sincerely,
